

Even though we've made it a fruitful year, we still miss spending time with all of you.

Danielle survived another year of RootsTech, with mom's help. Then the world shut down. We had pandemic, earthquakes, and the building 10 feet behind us burned down (and that was all in the same day). With the decision to stay socially distanced, Erik bought some new toys to make the work easier (so he says). He also bought his first pair of work boots in May, and by October they looked like this. We had a few socially distanced visitors. For the most part our year has been spent working. Erik and Hunter refinished the parking lot, painted and refinished the garage floor. We found some new renters for our front office, cleaned out and organized the entire warehouse, and Danielle expanded her Ribbon Storage business to Amazon.

It has been quite a year....
